Baseball Diamond Paving and Lights

COMMUNITY SPIRIT SHOWN
AT MONTHLY MEETING
OF O. B. CHAMBER

Considering the fact that it is midsummer vacation time, there was quite a good sized attendance at the regular monthly meeting of the Ocean Beach Chamber of Commerce last Monday night. Following the transaction of regular routine business and the appointment of standing committees by President Agan, there was a general discussion of paving and lighting problems now confronting the community. It was decided to push all present paving projects and a light will be sought for the particularly dark spot at Brighton avenue and DeFoe street.

A resolution was passed that a member can be given only one committee duty, thus dividing up the work of the chamber ultimately among all of the members and thereby tending to create a more thorough spirit of co-operation.

Owing to the fact that the first Monday in September is a holiday (Labor Day) it was arranged to hold the next regular meeting on the second Monday in September and Secretary Kennedy was instructed to notify all members by postcard of the change in date from September 1 to September 8.

Presentation of a request from Manager L. A. Shaffer of the O. B. Baseball Club for an endorsement of the team with some financial support for securing a diamond, resulted in an unanimous approval of the baseball club as a valuable advertising asset to the Beach, but pecuniary backing as a body was expressed as being beyond the province of the chamber. It was decided that the ball team management and a special committee from the chamber take steps toward securing suitable grounds for the club in Collier's park, where a permanent diamond could be maintained at nominal expense.

MIDDLE OF THE CENTURY

Fort Guijarros (Ballast Point) had no garrison after 1835. In 1840 the contents of the fort, consisting of nine cannon, fifty canisters of grape and three hundred balls, were sold to Juan Machado for $40.

A visitor in 1839 wrote, "Countless herds of cattle pastured around the edge of the bay."

Major William H. Emory who was here with General Kearny in 1846 mentions Point Loma:

"A high promontory, of nearly the same width, runs into the sea for four or five miles, and is connected by the flat with the mainland. The road to the hide-houses leads on the eastward of this promontory. . . . The harbor of San Francisco has more water, but that of San Diego has a more uniform climate, better anchorage, and perfect security from winds in any direction."

Another famous visitor, already mentioned in these articles, was Bayard Taylor, the poet. He was here in 1849. In his "El Dorado" he says:

"Point Loma, at the extremity of the bay, came in sight on the left, and in less than an hour we were at anchor before the hide-houses at the landing place. . . . The harbor is the finest on the Pacific, with the exception of Acapulco, and capable of easy and complete defense. The old hide-houses are built at the foot of the hills just inside the bay, and a fine road leads to the town of San Diego. . . . The Point, which comes down to the sea at an angle of 60 degrees, has been lately purchased by an American, for what purpose, I cannot imagine, unless it is with the hope of speculating on the Government when it shall be wanted for a lighthouse."

E. W. Morse was here in 1850. He says of the river that it then ran in close to the high ground at Old Town, making a bluff of ten or fifteen feet near one of the houses.

That famous Lieut. Derby who was in San Diego for the better part of two years, from 1853 to 1855, wrote us up in this joyous fashion:

"The Bay of San Diego is shaped like a boot, the leg forming the entrance from the sea, and the toe extending some twelve miles inland at right angles to it, as a matter of course, points southward to the latter end of Mexico, from which it is distant at present precisely three miles.

"The three villages then, which go to make up the great city of San Diego, are the Playa, Old Town, and New Town, or "Davis's Folly.' At the Playa there are but a few buildings at present, and these are not remarkable for size or architectural beauty of design. A long, low, one-storied tenement, near the base of the hills, once occupied by rollicking Captain Magruder and the officers under his command, is now the place where Judge Witherby, like Matthew, patiently 'sits at the receipt of custome.' But few customers appear, for with the exception of the mail steamer once a fortnight, and the Goliah and Ohio, two little coasting steamers that wheeze in and out once or twice a month, the calm waters of San Diego Bay remain unruffled by keel or cut-water from one year's end to another. Such a thing as a foreign bottom has never made its appearance to gladden the collector's heart; in this respect, the harbor has indeed proved bottomless. Two crazy old hulks riding at anchor, and the barque Clarissa Andrews (filled with coal for the P. M. S. S. Co.) wherein dwells Captain Bogart, like a second Robinson Crusoe, with a man Friday who is mate, cook, steward and all hands, make up the amount of shipping at the Playa.

"Then there is the Ocean House (that's Donohoe's) and a store marked Gardiner and Bleecker, than the inside of which nothing could be bleaker, for there's 'nothing in it,' and an odd-looking little building on stilts out in the water, where a savant named Sabot, in the employ of the U. S. Engineers, makes mysterious observations on the tide; and these, with three other small buildings, unoccupied, a fence and a graveyard, constitute all the 'improvements' that have been made at the Playa. The ruins of two old hide-houses, immortalized by Dana, are still standing, one bearing the weather-beaten name of Tasso. We examined these and got well bitten by fleas for our trouble. We also examined the other great curiosity of the Playa, a natural one—being a cleft in the adjacent hills some hundred feet in depth, with a smooth, hard floor of white sand and its walls of indurated clay, perforated with cavities wherein dwell countless numbers of great white owls. Through this cleft we marched into the bowels of the land without impediment for nearly half a mile."

CUTTING THE COST

DISCUSSED BY BOARD

Omission of several items, substitution of materials and the possibility of leaving several second floor rooms unfinished to reduce cost of construction was discussed by the Board of Education this week in considering the new Point Loma High School, which now is in process of construction under contract by Welch & Fritz.

The architect, Edwin T. Banning, submitted a list of items which will reduce the contract price of $255,773 more than $21,000.

FLOYD "CHICK" EVANS
SUGGESTED AS MANAGER
O. B. BALL TEAM

There is some mighty good timber to be obtained for making a gilt-edged baseball club in Ocean Beach and those who have the interests of the game at heart are casting about for a leader who will bear the managerial burden so successfully assumed by L. A. Shaffer last season, when the local club carried off a championship.

The able and popular "Shorty" Shaffer states that his manifold business interests at the Maine garage will prevent his giving the necessary time to again guiding the team and he has suggested a most worthy successor in Floyd Evans, known to all fans under the nickname of "Chick" and whose qualifications for the position of manager are of the highest order. "Chick" is an Ocean Beachite and is just the fellow for the job. His many friends sincerely hope he will consent to directing the affairs of the team.

Mission Beach

CONSTRUCTION BIDS
FOR BIG SEWER SYSTEM
OFFICIALLY CONSIDERED

Bids ranging from $223,000 to $272,000 for construction of a complete sewer system in Mission Beach were considered by members of the council this week and referred to the city manager for final report.

The lowest bid, submitted by C. E. Green, contained items of $135,000 for collection mains, $20,000 for a settling basin and necessary equipment, $38,000 for pumps, $25,000 for the outfall and $5,000 for a pressure line.

The proposed sewer system will accommodate every lot on the Mission Beach amusement and residential tract. Due to the level character of the peninsula, engineers resorted to novel features in drawing their plans, including automatic booster pumps in the sewer main line along the bay side and, to provide protection against contamination of bay and surf, a large settling basin and discharge from that by a single outfall, extending 1,000 feet into the sea.

MRS. MILDRED L. GREENE
ENDORSED FOR SUPERVISOR

The present incumbent on the Board of Supervisors from the first supervisorial district, Mrs. Mildred L. Readjustment Of Taxable Values

CO-OPERATION URGED BY COUNTY DEVELOPMENT
FEDERATION ON TAXES

Readjustment of taxable values in San Diego county was urged by the County Development Federation at its regular monthly meeting this week and a resolution was adopted calling for the appointment of a committee in each center of population to co-operate with the county assessor in revaluation work.

Each chamber of commerce and farm bureau organization is asked to name a committee of three or five residents, familiar with values in his section. County Assessor Moulton has approved the plan and will work with the various committees. This plan is only a temporary one, the federation being pledged to work for a complete revaluation of all taxable property in the county.

BIG NAVY SPECTACLE
SCHEDULED NEXT SPRING
OFF SAN DIEGO

It is officially announced in navy circles that the entire scouting fleet including five battleships and two divisions of scout cruisers, will sail from Honolulu June 7 for San Diego and will leave here for their stations on the Atlantic June 21. The control force and the Atlantic aircraft squadrons will base at San Diego during the entire period of the maneuvers of the combined fleets.

Probably the greatest naval spectacle staged in Pacific waters is scheduled to be held off San Diego from February 25 to March 12, when battleships, submarines, destroyers, seaplanes, airplanes, the rigid dirigible Shenandoah and more than a score of vessels of the train will engage in battle exercises. The object of this maneuver, it is said, is to test the defenses of San Diego and San Pedro.

What Do the Bankers Mean, "Eighteen Billion Dollars in the Savings Bank"?

By JOHN OAKWOOD

The bankers keep telling us that the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars. I asked a dozen people what that meant to them. Most of them seemed to see visions of endless stacks of coins and bales of currency stowed away in the vaults of fine looking granite bank buildings.

* * *

Now, as a matter of fact, there is less than nine billion dollars' worth of money in the country all told, including gold, silver, nickel and paper money of all kinds. That is less than half the eighteen billion. Therefore there must be something wrong with the vision of eighteen billion dollars in stacks and bales in the bank vaults. More than that, there probably is not more than one dollar for every twenty of that eighteen billion actually in the savings bank.

* * *

But the eighteen billion in savings bank is no myth just the same. Suppose all the savings depositors could demand all their money all at once, and that they insisted on immediate settlement one way or another when they found they could not get it all in cash. What would happen would be that they would come into possession chiefly of bonds—Government, state and municipal bonds and the best railroad, equipment, public utility and other corporation bonds. The savings depositors are really the owners of all this vast real wealth.

* * *

What the bankers really mean, therefore, is that the savings depositors, so far as money is concerned, have deposited eighteen billion dollars more than they have drawn out and therefore have credit for that much in their savings accounts. The dollars, themselves, that they handed in, have flowed right on through the banks—have been sent out to buy the bonds. That is, the money deposits have been used in behalf of the depositors to buy the safest forms of investments. When a man buys a bond, he really rents his money out—puts it to work to earn him more money. The savings banks have done this for their depositors.

* * *

So the picture of idle piles of money is all wrong. Even a picture of piles of bonds is wrong if it stops at that. The bonds represent two things. First, since they are readily saleable for cash, they mean that any individual can get his savings out again in the form of money within a reasonable time. Secondly, and more important, behind those bonds loom up the railroads, factories, businesses and public works that the money invested in them set going for the benefit of everyone, including the depositors themselves. Saving, therefore, is not merely accumulating money—it is accumulating real wealth. The money flows on like water to turn other wheels—the real wealth and savings of the country are the accumulated factories and other enterprises evidenced by the bonds.

* * *

Therefore the true picture of what the bankers mean when they say the savings accounts of the American people total eighteen billion dollars, instead of piles of money in vaults, would be factories, railroads and public works in action.

BANKERS' VIEW ON CO-OPERATIVE MARKETING

The attitude of the American Bankers Association on co-operative marketing favors proper organization to facilitate the orderly movement of farm products, but holds that the co-operatives are as amenable to economic laws as any form of business and cannot be used to gain special benefits for the farmer contrary to the influences of supply and demand and other normal factors. This view was formulated recently by Frank W. Simmonds of the Association before the National Council of Farmers Co-operative and Marketing Associations at Washington.

"It would be unfortunate for the farmer if he becomes imbued with the idea that co-operative marketing in itself is a panacea for all agricultural ills," Mr. Simmonds said. "Co-operative marketing, well organized and wisely managed, can be most helpful in solving market problems. It may prevent untimely dumping, it may secure better credit facilities, it may extend existing markets, it may even create new markets, but obviously its operations will be as amenable to economic law as those of other business enterprises.

What It Cannot Do

"Co-operative marketing cannot prevent other countries with cheaper land and labor from selling in foreign marts at a price unattractive to us. It cannot successfully over-ride the law of supply and demand or maintain for any length of time an artificially high price by withholding a product from market or unduly limiting production. Sane, orderly marketing must be accompanied by sane, orderly thinking.

ABSORBING THE SHOCK

It is interesting to note that roads which have best stood the impact of modern automobile traffic are constructed of shock absorbing material just as is the automobile which is saved from crystallization and destruction by the shock absorbing tires and springs.

BUILDING RECORDS BROKEN

Four out of five months of 1924 exceed in money valuation of building permits all corresponding former months and place the aggregate total for this year ahead of the heavy record of last year.

The average wage paid in the building industry today, say the Dodge reports, is at the peak since the war.

The downward change in building materials, according to the same authority, counterbalances this somewhat.

Lumber today as in the past remains the cheapest as well as the most commonly used building material in this nation.

It is one reason for individually owned homes throughout the United States.

THE MAKING OF RADIO FANS

The volume of radio business in 1921 was about $5,000,000. The next year it was $60,000,000. This figure was doubled in 1923.

It is estimated that the radio business will amount to $350,000,000 by the time this year's books are closed.

The record of growth is a great testimonial to the inventive genius, manufacturing ability and progress policies of the American businessmen, as with the telephone, street railway, electric lights, gas service and automobiles.

This country leads the world from the standpoint of making these conveniences a part of the everyday life of the average American citizen.

CLARK M. BARNES
BELIEVES IN CONSTRUCTION

As candidate for supervisor of the First District, Clark M. Barnes announces that he believes in the adoption of a constructive program, systematic and business-like, extending over a period of years and that this program should apply both to county buildings and to roads. Mr. Barnes is a builder of many years' experience.

LITERARY

WORTHWHILE REVIEWS

By Winifred Davidson

Fountains of Ordunna, by Cecelia Mackinnon, B. J. Brimmer Co., Boston. This little volume of verse is full of the spirit of song. The initial poem strikes a note of promise;

The fountain in Ordunna knows
That when its silver shaft arose
The earth protested, groaned and rocked,
But when it fell in shining spray
On famished sand and sun-baked clay,
The earth rejoiced.

O aching earth, this agony
Will end at last,
And fountains fill the shining land

And the last bit, "Prudent," is like an unfinished modulation:

When it is past.
Cover the fire,
Cover it deep,
From the ashes
Let no flame leap;
For someone will search
This house today;
Keep the fire
Hidden away.

Miss Mackinon is one of the new singers, one to prophecy by, if the lyric successors of her "Avowal" and "I Said" and "Magic" and other musical poems be richer in melody, surer of touch than these, her early efforts.

The BROWN MOUSE

By HERBERT QUICK

(Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Company)

"I—I have studied the grammar, and read 'Caesar,'" he faltered, "but that isn't much. I had no teacher, and I had to work pretty hard, and it didn't go very well."

"I've had all the Latin they gave in the colleges of my time," said Mr. Hofmyer, "if I do talk dialect; and I'll agree with you so far as to say that it would have been a crime for me to neglect the chemistry, bacteriology, physics, engineering and other sciences that pertain to farmin'—if there'd been any such sciences when I was gettin' my schoolin'."

"And yet," said Jim, "some people want us to guide ourselves by the courses of study made before these sciences existed."

"I don't, by hokey!" said Hofmyer. "I'll be dag-goned if you ain't right. I wouldn't 'a' said so before I heard that speech—but I say so now."

Jim's face lighted up at this, the first convincing evidence that he had scored.

"I b'lieve, too," went on Mr. Hofmyer. "that your idee would please our folks. I've been the standpatter in our parts—mostly on English and —say German. What d'ye say to comin' down and teachin' our school? We've got a two-room affair, and I was made a committee of one to find a teacher."

"I—I don't see how—" Jim stammered, all taken aback by this new breeze of recognition.

"We can't pay much," said Hofmyer. "You have charge of the dis-cip-line in the whole school, and teach in Number Two room. Seventy-five dollars a month. Does it appeal to ye?"

Appeal to him! And yet, how about the Simmses, Colonel Woodruff, the Hansens and Newton Bronson, now just getting a firm start on the upward path to usefulness and real happiness? How could he leave the little, crude, puny structure on which he had been working—on which he had been merely practicing—for a year, and remove to the new field?

"I'm afraid I can't," said Jim Irwin, "but—"

"If you're only 'fraid you can't," said Mr. Hofmyer, "think it over. I've got your post office address on this program, and we'll write you a formal offer. We may spring them figures a little. Think it over."

"You mustn't think," said Jim, "that we've done all the things I mentioned in my talk, or that I haven't made any mistakes or failures."

"Your county superintendent didn't mention any failures," said Mr. Hofmyer.

"Did you talk with her about my work?" inquired Jim, suddenly very curious.

"M'h'm."

"Then I don't see why you want me," Jim went on.

"Why?" asked Mr. Hofmyer.

"I had not supposed," said Jim, "that she had a very high opinion of my work."

"I didn't ask her about that," said Mr. Hofmyer, "though I guess she thinks well of it. I asked her what you are tryin' to do, and what sort of a fellow you are. I was favorably impressed; but she didn't mention any failures."

"We haven't succeeded in adopting a successful system of selling our cream," said Jim. "I believe we can do it, but we haven't."

"Wal," said Mr. Hofmyer, "I d'know as I'd call that a failure. The fact that you're tryin' of it shows you've got the right idees. We'll write ye, and mebbe pay your way down to look us over. We're a pretty good crowd, the neighbors think."

CHAPTER XVII

Think of It.

Ames was an inspiration. Jim Irwin received from the great agricultural college more real education in this one trip than many students get from a four years' course in its halls; for he had spent ten years in getting ready for the experience. The great farm of hundreds of acres, all under the management of experts, the beautiful campus, the commodious classrooms and laboratories, and especially the barns, the greenhouses, gardens, herds and flocks filled him with a sort of apostolic joy.

"Every school," said he to Professor Withers, "ought to be doing a good deal of the work you have to do here."

"I'll admit," said the professor, "that much of our work in agriculture is pretty elementary."

"It's intermediate school work," said Jim. "It's wrong to force boys and girls to leave their homes and live in a college to get so much of what they should have before they're ten years old."

"There's something in what you say," said the professor, "but some experiment station men seem to think that agriculture in the common schools will take from the young men and

MAKING IT HARD FOR BANK CROOKS

How the Nation's Bankers Are Banded Together in War on Crime—The Great Crook Trap and the Way It Works.

By JOHN OAKWOOD

The slick gentry who have been wont to walk into banks and mesmerize paying tellers into giving them good cash for worthless checks have recently become aware of the fact that their operations are daily growing more difficult. Crooks who have operated with apparent immunity for years have suddenly found themselves caught in the meshes of what amounts to a nation wide crook trap.

To show how effectively this is now working, one of the biggest figures among the worthless check operators, a man who claims to have defrauded dozens of banks and realized more than $300,000 from his operations, recently fell into the toils of the trap. Realizing that he was hopelessly caught, he made a complete confession.

This trap is conducted by the Protective Department of the American Bankers Association, which includes in its membership more than 22,000 banks that are thus leagued in a perpetual warfare against the army of bank crooks scattered throughout the nation.

A Dramatic Arrest

A dramatic illustration of the workings of the association's detective department was recently staged in Buffalo, N. Y., resulting in the sudden downfall of a pair of check swindlers and terminating a year's successful operations in some fifteen cities in various sections of the country.

The pair began their operations in Buffalo in the middle of January, one of them appearing at the special savings account window of a bank there. He presented a counter check on the bank for $75.60, together with a deposit slip filled in for $20.60. He also presented a second deposit slip for $3, proffering with it $3 in currency. He told the teller that he wanted to deposit the two items, that is, $3 in cash and $20.60 out of the check, to the credit of his wife, explaining that he had forgotten to bring her book but would return with it later. His cash and the check were accepted, totaling $78.60. From this sum his wife's supposed account was credited with $23.60, the total of the two deposit slips, and he was given $55 cash in change.

After the man left the bank the teller became suspicious due to his prolonged failure to return as he had promised with his wife's deposit book. On investigation the check he had left was found to be worthless. The bank communicated with the local detective office of the association, giving a complete description of the man.

The Alarm Is Given

Later that same day the detective office received another report from a second bank that it had been similarly defrauded by a man answering the description given by the first bank. Steps were at once taken to set a trap for him should he attempt further operations. All surrounding banks were warned that he was in the vicinity and a complete description was given them of his appearance and of his mode of operating. They were advised to have their tellers and on the lookout and to communicate at once by telephone with active office in case anyone answering their lobbies who seemed wer to the description of the wanted. They were also instructed to take steps to detain him in the bank.

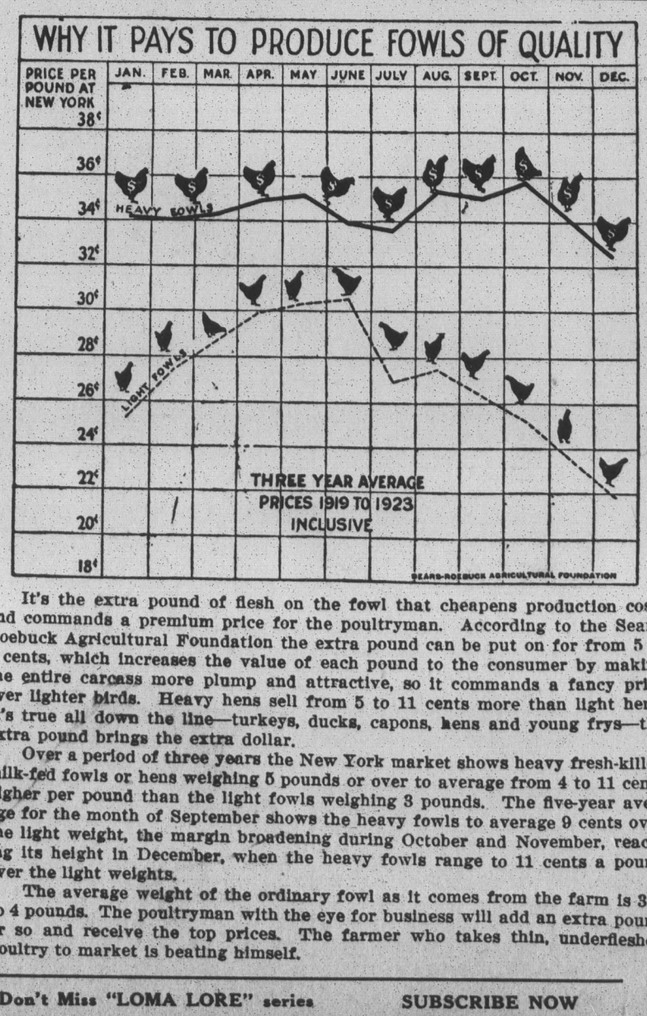
Early the next afternoon the telephone rang in the detective office and a message came from a third bank that they thought the man was in its lobby. Three detectives rushed to the bank in an automobile which had been held continuously in waiting. Two of the detectives covered the entrances of the bank and the third went into the lobby. He at once noticed a short, well dressed man standing at one side and watching the line of people at the tellers' windows. In the line he noticed a large man, answering the description of the bad check operator he was seeking.

The detective approached the man who at once scented trouble and tore up the papers he had in his hand, hiding the pieces in his pocket. At signs of his putting up a fight, the detective grappled with him and called to his two associates at the doors to arrest the other man whom he had noticed as he entered. After a short struggle the two men were overpowered. When the larger of the two was searched a torn check was found in his pocket, made out in the same writing as the two that had been successfully passed the day before. A number of similar checks all prepared for use, were also found on his confederate. When confronted by the tellers of the banks who had been victimized the day before, the leader was readily identified. The two prisoners were hopelessly ensnared, admitted their guilt and in their hotel rooms were found a large number of checks, deposit slips and pass books of banks in various cities.

The Trap Sprung Again

Similar quick action of the bank crook trap in Boston terminated the career of another check forger who had been operating successfully in the New England states. The banks which he had victimized notified the American Bankers Association with the result that all other banks in the territory were warned against him and were put on guard. Therefore, when he walked into a Boston bank to continue his operations he walked into a trap as he was immediately recognized and nabbed by the officers there.

These are only two instances of many that have recently taken place in various parts of the country. Some of these arrests have brought into the toils of the authorities some of the slickest operators in this line in the country and from them have been learned the details of the way bank crooks operate, placing in the hands of the detective department the means to put banks on guard against further depredations.



It's the extra pound of flesh on the fowl that cheapens production costs and commands a premium price for the poultryman. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation the extra pound can be put on for from 5 to 7 cents, which increases the value of each pound to the consumer by making the entire carcass more plump and attractive, so it commands a fancy price over lighter birds. Heavy hens sell from 5 to 11 cents more than light hens. It's true all down the line—turkeys, ducks, capons, hens and young frys—the extra pound brings the extra dollar.

Over a period of three years the New York market shows heavy fresh-killed milk-fed fowls or hens weighing 5 pounds or over to average from 4 to 11 cents higher per pound than the light fowls weighing 3 pounds. The five-year average for the month of September shows the heavy fowls to average 9 cents over the light weight, the margin broadening during October and November, reaching its height in December, when the heavy fowls range to 11 cents a pound over the light weights.

The average weight of the ordinary fowl as it comes from the farm is 3¼ to 4 pounds. The poultryman with the eye for business will add an extra pound or so and receive the top prices. The farmer who takes thin, underfleshed poultry to market is beating himself.
